

PWC Access Case Study

Barry Wharton, King Sturge Management

“King Sturge LLP has used PWC Access for a number of years now across a variety of our commercial properties. They provide a high quality, comprehensive service covering all our working-at-heights requirements”, says Barry Wharton, Contracts Manager for King Sturge Management.

PWC Access are an approved contractor to King Sturge LLP, supplying cradle maintenance, fall arrest equipment and the installation of man-safe wire safety systems. PWC Access also provides commercial window cleaning, accessed by cradles and rope access techniques; mastic repair; painting works; pressure washing; powder coated façade restoration; and complete support on all aspects of working at height regarding safety advice and guidance.

“PWC are very thorough and recognize the critical importance of not cutting corners where health and safety is at stake. They check everything carefully once it has been installed, provide us with relevant certificates and make sensible, proactive recommendations. However, they also always give us a balanced judgment, only making recommendations for items which are genuinely required.

“We have monthly meetings with them and these work really well, with PWC keeping us fully up-to-date with all issues and products relating to working at height solutions. We never need to chase for inspections, these are scheduled in efficiently and promptly.

“All their personnel work to a consistent, professional standard, with their operatives always very well turned out, polite and thorough. Every aspect of how PWC Access operates gives us complete confidence in their service and I’m sure we will continue to use them for many years to come.”
