

PWC Access Case Study

“PWC Access is my first port of call for any activity requiring working at heights,” says Mike Grimwood, Facility Manager at DTZ. “If I have any queries or require information, I talk to PWC as I know that their advice will be detailed, knowledgeable and impartial. The integrity of their advice is such that I’ve even known them talk themselves out of a job rather than try and sell me something I don’t need.”

However, there have been a number of times when PWC Access have provided products and services which have very much been needed. For example, vital safety eyebolts and hooped ladders which a previous contractor had missed were identified by PWC Access as required and were installed on a high rise block in Birmingham.

“PWC put health and safety as their top priority, just as I do. They never cut corners, provide a clear assessment of the situation and offer training where it is needed,” comments Mike. “Another thing I like is their flexibility. They will provide any work at height that is required; maintenance, cleaning, painting, even graffiti removal. With a particularly stubborn piece of graffiti, PWC didn’t give up, even when it was 90% removed; they have explored different cleaning materials to help to remove all traces. PWC goes that extra mile.”

Mike’s view supports the evidence from other clients; if you’re looking for a company to provide you with the highest quality service for any activity involving working at height, then turn with confidence to PWC Access.
